

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

In a method for stabilizing an optical output of a semiconductor laser: the semiconductor laser is heated with a heater when the semiconductor laser is not in operation; and the heating of the semiconductor laser is stopped, or the amount of heat supplied to the semiconductor laser is lowered, almost simultaneously with startup of the semiconductor laser.